Former Faculty Club has new tenants

The Software Engineering/Education Co-operative project has found its new home on campus in E Building, site of the old Faculty Club. Renovations were made to the former club building over the summer to prepare for the arrival of IBM computer equipment used in the project, which is the result of a co-operative agreement signed last year by UVic and IBM Canada Ltd. With the signing of the agreement in July 1983, UVic became the first university in Western Canada to enter a co-operative arrangement with IBM Canada Ltd. to research and develop software for use by students in primary and secondary schools. The agreement calls for IBM to give the university an IBM 4300 computer and personal computers and software programs to carry out research, and to have access to IBM personnel who will visit campus to aid in research and training here. Above, program manager Marily Gore shares a joke with Ron Graham (centre) and Frank Shulte, IBM representatives who visited campus Sept. 18 to discuss preparations for the official opening of the project site Oct. 31. Tours to show the new facility to interested campus members will be offered Oct. 30. Below, science graduate student Roger Harper gives one of the first labs to be offered in one of the rooms in the new facility.

Shoe-shine blitz raises $9,000

In spite of rainy weather, Shinerama '84 raised approximately $9,000 Sept. 22 for the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

Armed with polish and brushes, UVic students raised $7,400 on Victoria's street corners and in shopping malls shining shoes for people who donated to the cause, and $1,500 was raised during the benefit dance on Saturday evening.

Although the weather likely kept many people inside, the event can be temed a success, says Mike Peterson, vice president of programs for the UVic Alma Mater Society which organizes the annual shoeshine.

The students who were shining shoes came mostly from the first year class and were "absolutely heroic" in the way they worked during the drizzling day, says Peterson. "They were patient and good natured and a credit to the university."

Health officials search for source of food poisoning

Health authorities are preparing a questionnaire for people who ate in the Commons Block residence dining room and cafeterias at any time from Sept. 9 to 15 in an effort to track down the source of food poisoning that hit more than 300 residence students last week.

"The questionnaire may be our only chance to find out how it happened," said Public Health Officer Dr. Brian Allen this week.

Allen said the food poisoning, caused by campylobacter organisms, was the largest he had ever seen of its kind. Campylobacter is a common food poisoning organism.

Residence students began complaining on the weekend of Sept. 15 and 16 and about 60 students showed up at University Health Services Sept. 17 with symptoms such as stomach cramps, headache, diarrhea, vomiting, weakness and dehydration.

Dr. J.E. Petersen, director of University Health Services, said more than 100 students reported to the health services office. Two were hospitalized and later released.

Gavin Quiney, manager of Housing and Conference Services, said a quick door-to-door survey of residence students revealed that 332 students exhibited symptoms of the food poisoning.

Petersen said the symptoms of the food poisoning, which causes violent but short-lived stomach cramps and diarrhea, usually disappear within five to seven days.

"There are some students still suffering some effects, but we have not seen any new cases since the original outbreak," said Petersen earlier this week.

Allen said public health officials are getting excellent co-operation from UVic officials. Prof. Denis Protti, director of UVic's Health Information Science Program, helped to design the questionnaire for residence students and the university computer will analyze the results of that questionnaire.

"The questionnaire will attempt to identify, hypothetically, the common denominator among those who ate in the Commons Block," explained Allen.

He explained that the organism is often transmitted from pets or birds to food to people, "but this is obviously not the case here. It appears more likely to be a food or liquid source."

Allen said water samples have been checked out in laboratory tests but the tests have shown that the quality is satisfactory. He does not hold out much hope of solving the mystery through lab tests on food samples taken from the Commons Block last week.

"We haven't had all the results on the food samples back from the lab, but generally these tests are unreliable in obtaining a positive sample of the bacteria from food."

Allen said investigators are fortunate that the food poisoning occurred in a university rather than in a restaurant or at a wedding reception. "The residence students are still here and we have a good opportunity to follow up on this and try to pin down the source," he said.

A group of about 25 residence students, concerned about the situation, met last week and decided to conduct a residence-wide survey on food services for residence students.

Food Services carries on

There is nobody more concerned about solving the mystery of the food poisoning outbreak among residence students than Horst Mann, manager of Food Services.

"It appears that we are the middle-man in all of this," said Mann, this week. "I can't apologize enough to those who suffered and we would like very much to find out what brought this bug into the Commons Block."

Health inspectors who arrived in the Commons Block kitchens Sept. 17 are still on the scene and still searching for clues to the outbreak caused by campylobacter organisms, a common source of food poisoning.

The officials took samples of all food and liquids in stock at Food Services, but thus far, lab tests have not revealed a possible source of the infection.

There are half a dozen employees of Food Services who were off sick and are being kept off the job under public health orders.

Mann said Food Services appreciates the support of the entire university community during this time. "We are still serving almost 5,000 meals a day and our outlets on campus are not suffering," he said. "We are receiving the normal number of bookings for special events."

One major change has been made, for the time being, in the dining rooms. Food Services is not serving fresh vegetables. All food items are either cooked or preserved.

Budget cuts planned at SFU

Dr. William Saywell, President of Simon Fraser University, announced a package of sweeping changes Sept. 21, designed to cut an estimated $3 million from SFU's 1985-86 operating budget.

Saywell announced that some programs would be dropped and cuts would be made in others in order that the university could redirect its focus, if his proposals are approved by SFU's Board of Governors.

He warned that persistent application of across-the-board cuts represented "the road to mediocrity". He also warned that further severe cuts in revenues would force the university "to declare a financial exigency and cannibalize the institution."

Among Saywell's major proposals:

- the elimination of the Faculty of Interdisciplinary Studies, with its five departments relocated in other faculties. The programs in Latin American, Middle East and African studies would be discontinued while the Centre for the Arts would be asked to cut its operation by one-third. General studies courses would be discontinued.
- Undergraduate offerings in German and Russian and the graduate program in Spanish would be discontinued.
- Further cuts in the athletics program, added to cuts made over the past two years will mean the athletics program budget will be cut by about 40 per cent, with the savings to be realized through the elimination of some sports.

Saywell will also be seeking early approval from the BOG for an exigency policy to provide the means for eliminating faculty positions in a financial crisis.

Saywell also announced his intention to establish three task forces to conduct in-depth studies on curriculum reform, the trimester system and teaching evaluation. Another study will review faculty workload to ensure an equitable system throughout SFU.

Plans to revitalize the university include establishment of an innovative fund to hire the most promising young faculty members available. The fund would be established with $1 million from the university, augmented through external donations.

Saywell also proposed a new faculty of applied science to incorporate the existing faculty of engineering science as well as departments formerly housed in interdisciplinary studies.

Despite the sweeping changes, no faculty or staff members will lose jobs until after current negotiated agreements have expired.

Calling all poets

Here's an opportunity for students and alumni to wax eloquent about UVic and get paid for doing so.

The Department of Creative Writing has organized a poetry competition to celebrate the 21st anniversary of UVic with a $150 prize to the winner.

Poems should deal with some aspect of UVic and be no longer than 20 lines. They must be typed on a single sheet of paper with the name and address of the entrant on the top left-hand corner of the page. Only one poem per entrant may be submitted.

Poems are to be sent to the Creative Writing Department. Final date for submissions is 4:30 p.m., Nov. 25.

Symposium slated

An expert in preparing development programs for South Pacific nations is the featured speaker at a symposium sponsored by Islands '86 and University Extension Oct. 2 on campus.

The symposium will be held in Room 157 of the Begbie Building with registration beginning at 6:45 p.m. and the presentation at 7:30 p.m. Students will be admitted free, with others paying $5.

Dr. Michael Hamnett, deputy director and research co-ordinator of the Pacific Islands Development program at the East-West Centre in Honolulu, Hawaii, will speak on "Critical Issues in Pacific Islands Development to the Year 2000".

Hamnett has done extensive field work in Papua New Guinea and in Micronesia. He has completed development survey work on Naru, Fiji, Kiribati and Tuvalu. Responding to his address will be Dr. J.A. Boutilier of Royal Roads and Ken Stratford, vice-president of the Islands '86 Society.

Gowans invited to lecture in U.S.

Dr. Alan Gowans of the Department of History in Art at UVic is one of six prominent scholars to be invited to speak in a film-lecture series entitled "The City" in Rochester, N.Y. Oct. 14 to Nov. 25.

The series, at the Rochester Museum and Science Centre, will examine the origins of early cities, the evolution of urban transportation, the ecology of cities and the future of cities.

Gowans will speak on "the nature of cultural history" Nov. 11.

The UVic professor is recognized internationally as an authority on American art and architecture and on popular commercial arts. The author of numerous publications, he was the first art historian to be appointed to a new position in 1981 as distinguished visiting professor in art history at George Washington University and Senior Fellow at the National Gallery of Art's Centre for Advanced Studies in Visual Arts, in Washington, D.C.

Athletes come back

The weekend of Oct. 26 through 28 will mark the return to campus of athletes who have represented UVic over the past 21 years.

Ken Shields, manager of Athletics and Recreational Services, explains that the "Homecoming Weekend" has been organized to mark UVic's 21st birthday.

Included on the agenda are old-timers' games and games featuring recent alumni playing against 1984 interuniversity teams in several sports. There will be a banquet, Oktoberfest beer garden and dance, pancake breakfast and recreational events for the entire family.

Further information is available from the office of Athletics and Recreational Services in the McKinnon Centre.

Storage areas are filled to overflowing

Bicycling boom creates problems

The bus dispute has created a sudden increase in bicyclists on campus and another parking headache for Traffic and Security personnel.

Many people who started riding bicycles as an answer to the absence of buses for three months became aware of the pleasures of cycling and have not gone back to the buses now that they are running again.

The result is a cluttered campus, with bicycles tied to trees, lamp posts, on wheelchair ramps and in bike racks.

"The problem will likely be resolved by cold, wet weather," says Traffic and Security manager T.W. O'Connor. "Right now it's a cause for concern."

O'Connor asks cyclists to show consideration when hunting for a storage place for bikes. "Right now they're blocking entrances and wheelchair ramps, and could cause conflicts with grounds crews because they are tied to trees and other work areas."

O'Connor said he is aware that there are not sufficient storage areas for bikes on campus. "We thought we had enough and now I doubt we'll ever have enough. The difficulty is that we are running out of storage room in convenient locations."

"All of our bike racks are filled to capacity."

He said Traffic and Security is studying the situation and plans to provide more bike racks. "In the meantime, we ask cyclists to show some discretion when trying to find a storage place."

Jaycees seek Vanier nominees

The Canada Jaycees are seeking help in finding five outstanding young Canadians, aged 18 to 39, to receive the Vanier Award for 1984.

The award is named in honor of the late Governor General Georges P. Vanier and is an attempt to recognize the achievements and contributions of young Canadians in a variety of areas.

Nominations will be accepted until Nov. 30 of this year and the awards will be presented in Toronto, March 8, 1985.

Past Vanier winners include former Governor General Edward Schreyer, singer Anne Murray and author Margaret Atwood.

Awards will be presented based on the resumes of the nominee's achievements or contribution in such areas as personal improvement, political or government service, legal reform, cultural achievement or academic or athletic leadership.

The Jaycees report that they are interested in receiving as many nominations as possible from all walks of life and all regions of Canada. Anyone who knows of an outstanding young Canadian can obtain nomination forms at the Sedgewick office of UVic President Dr. Howard Petch. Further information can be obtained by writing to Alice Schmidt, director of nominations, Toronto Junior Board of Trade/Toronto Jaycees, Box 60, 3 First Canadian Place, Toronto, Ont. M5X 1C1.

The Ring is published every Friday during Winter Session. Letters to the editor will be published if signed and without libellous content. Letters are subject to editing to meet space requirements. Material contained in the Ring can be reprinted or broadcast freely without permission. Credit is not necessary but would be appreciated.

Conference examines East-West relations

Zi Huayun, a Chinese dancer who has performed in more than 30 countries, will be featured during a night of entertainment Oct. 7 in University Centre Auditorium.

Relations between Canada and China will be explored and social and cultural ties between the two countries strengthened at a meeting of East and West to take place at UVic Oct. 5 through 8.

Canada & China: New Directions for the Friendship Movement is the theme of the conference, which will be the second national convention of the Federation of Canada-China Friendship Associations and the first in Western Canada. It is being sponsored by the Centre for Pacific and Oriental Studies at UVic in collaboration with the FCCFA.

A highlight of the event will be a night of entertainment to be offered at the UVic University Centre Auditorium Oct. 7.

Performances will be offered by three entertainers visiting as members of the delegation from Beijing known as YOUXIE, or the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries, members of which will be among the guests of the conference.

The performers will be Zi Huayun, well-known dancer of the China Central Song and Dance Ensemble, who has visited and performed in more than 30 countries in Asia, Europe, North America and Latin America; Chen Yaosing, of the Central Ensemble of Chinese National Music who is a composer and skilled in playing Chinese wind and string instruments such as the Erhu, Piba, Sanxuan, Sheng, and Bamboo Flute; and Pei Xiayun, folk singer of the Shenyang Song and Dance Ensemble.

To open the evening of entertainment, a feature prize-winning film from China, The Country Couple (1983) will be shown.

Throughout the conference, an exhibit of children's art from China will be on display in the Auditorium foyer.

Among the guests of the conference will be His Excellency Yu Zhan, Ambassador of the People's Republic of China in Canada and Madame Yu; and the Consul General Mr. Zhu Yi and Madame Zhu from the Chinese Consulate in Vancouver.

The keynote address, "China & the West: A New Era", will be delivered by Professor Victor C. Falkenheim from the Department of Political Science at the University of Toronto, and associate director of the Joint Centre on Modern East Asia at the U of T and York University.

Other speakers and their topics will include Don McMaster, director of the China desk of the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA), discussing "Trends in Co-operation Between Canada and China: An Overview of CIDA's Programs" and Professor Stephen Endicott of the Department of History at York University discussing "China's New Agricultural Policies".

A panel discussion on "Images of China in the Canadian Media" will feature panelists Duan Jin, first secretary (press) of the Embassy of China in Ottawa; Professor Lindsay Crysler, chairman of the Department of Journalism at Concordia University in Montreal, and Professor Claude-Yves Charron, chairman of the Department of Communications at the Université du Québec à Montréal.

"Present Programs with China and Their Potential for Friendship Work" will be examined during other panel discussions centering on human resource development for Chinese professionals in Canada, Canadian university exchanges, cultural and language orientation programs for exchange projects, and sending teachers of English to China.

The cost of attending all conference sessions is $20, or $5 for one-half day registration. The total cost of attending the night of entertainment Oct. 7 is $4.

Scholarship winner arrives for year of study at UVic

Jane Zhen Wang: the first recipient of the Madame Soong Ching Ling Memorial Scholarship

By Donna Danylchuk

Jane (Zhen) Wang, the first recipient of the Madame Soong Ching Ling Memorial Scholarship offered by UVic, arrived on campus Sept. 14 to begin a full year of study.

Jane is from the City of Beijing (Peking) in China where for the past two years she has worked for the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries.

The Friendship Association chose Jane as their representative to receive the scholarship, worth $5,000, based on her scholastic record and the work she performed for them in Beijing as interpreter, translator, office worker and report writer.

Jane worked for the North American Oceanian Department of the Friendship Association and met people from Canada, the United States, Australia, New Zealand and Jamaica during her work, but this is her first trip abroad.

"I have come here to study and broaden my knowledge, establish my career, get to know Canada and its people and make friends here," says the 24-year-old who began her English studies at age 13 in high school in Beijing. She now speaks fluent English.

She spent her first three days on campus at UVic's University House before settling in for the year as a boarder with a Canadian family.

Jane says she finds everything "new and strange" but feels comfortable in her temporary new home due to the friendliness of the people she has met so far. She was given course advice and assistance in finding living quarters by the Director of the Centre for Pacific and Oriental Studies at UVic, Dr. Jan Walls.

Jane holds a B.A. with a major in English from the Beijing Institute of Foreign Languages, where she studied for four years after high school. Approximately 1,000 students attend the Institute, where more than 20 languages are taught, with English being the largest department of study. In addition to her English studies, Jane studied French for two years at the Institute.

Shortly before her departure from Beijing for Canada, Jane was married.

Her husband has remained in China, and she says she looks forward to rejoining him and setting up house in Beijing upon her return.

At UVic this term, Jane is studying Canadian history, comparative North American literature, women's studies, and demography, and will audit courses on the United States in the 20th Century and sociological theories.

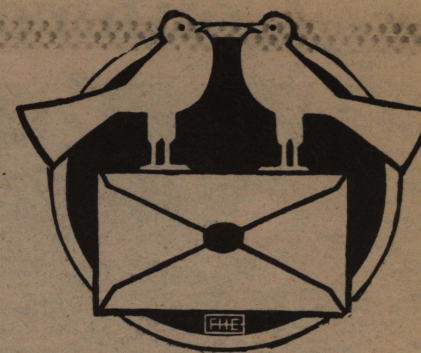

A delegation from UVic travelled to Peking to confer an honorary Doctor of Laws degree on Madame Soong in recognition of her life-long public service in China in the field of social welfare.

At a banquet in Beijing in Madame Soong's home, UVic President Dr. Howard Petch asked permission to name a scholarship in her honor. Permission was given the next day by Madame Soong.

The scholarship had been proposed by Petch to the Chamber of Commerce prior to the visit of the UVic delegation to China. Dr. Arne Lane, then President of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce, undertook to raise an endowment for the scholarship. He was partially successful and the remainder of the required funds are from a bequest to the University of Victoria.

Madame Soong was named honorary Chairman of the People's Republic of China shortly after the ceremony and just prior to her death.

Since then, through the co-operation of UVic and the Chamber, funds have been made available to award the $5,000 scholarship each year. The scholarship is administered by UVic and the recipient is selected by the Friendship Association.

United Way needs more UVic donors

The Editor
The Ring
Dear Sir:

The annual United Way campaign is again under way and university employees have received donation forms and information about the local agencies supported by this remarkably efficient exercise in fund-raising to meet community needs. As a member of the volunteer Board of Directors of the United Way of Greater Victoria, I welcome the endorsements of the campaign by the Presidents of the faculty and staff associations and of our two CUPE locals.

I believe that two points are worth bringing to the attention of your readers. One is that the information sent to University employees is somewhat misleading in suggesting that the amounts shown in the brochure briefly describing the programs of local member agencies are their funding requests for 1985, to be met from funds collected in the campaign now under way. In fact, the amounts shown are those allocated to the agencies in 1984 from last fall's campaign. Despite the success of that campaign, it did not raise sufficient money to meet the funding requests of the agencies or even the amounts recommended by the United Way panels which scrutinized agency budgets and reviewed agency programs. Member agencies are only now developing their 1985 budgets, including the amounts they will be requesting from the United Way. It is certain that those requests will, in most if not all instances, be higher than the amounts the United Way was able to provide them in 1984. The need is still there and generous support is required.

The other point is the disappointing (to me personally and I am sure to others) fact that, although there were 293 donors last year and they gave an average of $127, there were obviously many of us who did not give "at the office" and, since the United Way no longer finds it possible to mount a residential campaign, did not give "at home" either. I hope that this year many of the 1,000 or so University employees who apparently did not contribute to the United Way a year ago will find it possible to return a pledge card with as generous a donation as their circumstances permit. As the brochure says, and as I can confirm from my own involvement, our community's needs are growing.

Sincerely,
Dean Halliwell
University Librarian

Tools for Peace campaign launched

Editor:

For the third year in a row The Coalition for Aid to Nicaragua is organizing a "Tools for Peace" campaign to send a ship full of supplies to Nicaragua.

Our goal this year is to raise $1,000,000 in agricultural, mechanical, carpentry and fishing equipment; school and office supplies, furniture, technical and scientific research materials, anything in the way of medical and dental supplies, as well as toys, games, arts and crafts material, musical instruments, cloth diapers, etc.

If you can either volunteer your time or make donations, your help would be greatly appreciated. The World Concerns Coalition (a co-sponsor) will be holding a meeting on Friday, Sept. 28, SUB Room 111, at 12:30 p.m. For further information about the 1984 "Tools for Peace" campaign on the UVic campus please contact:

It was a mixed home weekend for the defending Canada West University Athletic Association (CWUAA) champion UVic Vikings soccer team Sept. 21 and 22. The Vikings looked very strong in defeating the University of Lethbridge Pronghorns 7-0, but dropped a 2-1 decision to the University of Calgary Dinosaurs in the second outing. The two games marked the beginning of the CWUAA season for the Vikings and the first two CWUAA games for new head coach Bruce Twamley. Twamley took over this year from Brian Hughes who had coached the Vikings for 12 years. Hughes is coaching the Victoria-based Canadian Player Pool developmental team as part of his commitment to the Canadian national team program. Twamley and the Vikings are in the Prairies for games today against the University of Saskatchewan and against the University of Alberta Sept. 29.

Eli Pasquale who played a major role on five straight UVic Vikings Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union (CIAU) championship basketball teams, has been signed to a National Basketball Association contract by the Seattle SuperSonics. Pasquale who wound up his brilliant Viking and Canadian Olympic team career earlier this year, will play for the Sonics in an NBA exhibition game against Phoenix Suns Oct. 10 at the Pacific Coliseum in Vancouver. Pasquale, who played his entire university career with the Vikings, was drafted in the fifth round and 106th overall in the NBA draft. He becomes the second Canadian ever to play for the Sonics. The first was Lars Hansen of Coquitlam.

For the second year in a row, members of UBC's Faculty Association have agreed to a contract settlement that provides for no scale increments or merit adjustments. According to UBC Reports this means that UBC faculty salaries in 1984-85 will remain at 1982-83 levels. Faculty Association President Prof. Elmer Ogryzlo is quoted as saying that to the best of his knowledge, UBC was once again the only university in Canada at which professors would receive no salary increase. "Although university faculty elsewhere may have agreed to a salary cut they have...received their normal career progress increments," said Ogryzlo. "This has not been the case at UBC."

The Faculty of Engineering has received what is described as "a very good collection of drafting tools" as a donation from retired engineer W.H. Nicholson of Grand Forks. Dr. Len Bruton, Dean of Engineering, says the donation of French curves, lettraset, templates, pens and rulers will be put to good use by staff and graduate students in connection with their work and research.

The UVic Vikettes field hockey team has been ranked number one in Canada, following four straight victories in the first Canada West University Athletic Association (CWUAA) tournament of the season. The Vikings, playing in Edmonton in conditions so cold that the games had to be moved inside, defeated the universities of Calgary, Alberta, Manitoba and British Columbia.
